Amuse- ments

The ball room scene in "Old Arkansas," the great scenic production which appears at the Grand tonight, is said to be the most elaborate set ever carried by a road company. The scene is a beautiful combination of dainty tints and artistic grouping of balconies, balustrades and fine furnishings. In the center of this magnificent scene is a wonderfully constructed electric fountain from which real water spurts completing the set. Secret electrical appliances flashing forth lights of many hues beneath the trickling waters of the fountain make a display never equaled on any stage. A glimpse at fairland, said an enthusiastic critic, the most ingenious and beautiful stage setting I have ever had the pleasure of seeing.

Whitney and Knowles' production of "Quo Vadis," as dramatized by Stanislav Strzemecki, which is to be the attraction at the Grand Friday evening, comes to us after having made an international success having been produced both in London and New York to enormous houses and in Chicago where the run had to be extended in order to accommodate the pat-ron's of McVickar's theatre who wanted to see it. In New York the playhouse did not close until long after all the other of the season's successes had gone into summer attire. This production of "Quo Vadis" is the only authorized and correct one. Unfortunately for the play goer as well as the management, the copyright laws are such as not to allow the name to be copyrighted, and for this reason there have been many imitations under the title, but not yet has one been found to compare in excellence with the version of Mr. Strzemecki, who, not satisfied with the reading of the English version, went to Sienkiewicz's original manuscript for his translation and in doing so has been able to extract the cream par excellence, something that could not have been done from the English translation alone. In order to complete the life-like pictures, the play has been embellished with the richest stage settings, costumes and properties and altogether the production is one of colossal splendor on a scale of grandeur never before seen here. This production was presented at the Edible au-
